CHAPTER XII.

SOLDIERS OF THE REVOLUTION.

The Last Campaign—The French Army—Members of the Haverstraw Regiment of Militia—The Continentals—Members of Capt. Robert Johnston's Company—Of Captain Amos Hutchins' Company—Officers of the Orangetown Regiment.

THE year 1781 witnessed the last campaign of importance in the war. Washington had spent the winter and spring at New Windsor, his army in the Highlands and in a line of cantonments extending from the Ramapo valley to Morristown, N. J. The French had wintered at Newport. The time had come for striking a fatal blow. The allies would either lay siege to New York city or strike Cornwallis at Yorktown, Va. Their first decision was to try New York. On June 18th the French started from Rhode Island toward Westchester county, N. Y. Washington left his headquarters at New Windsor on the 26th, and with the American divisions crossed the Hudson. The junction with the French army was effected, the left of the French line being at White Plains, the American right on the Tappan Zec, at Dobbs Ferry. The American troops then numbered only four thousand five hundred; they had no uniforms and were poorly equipped, in this respect presenting a great contrast to the French army. For nearly two months the allies remained practically inactive in Westchester county, threatening Sir Henry Clinton's army on the south side of the Harlem. They were waiting for the French fleet without the aid of which they did not wish to attack. When it was known that De Grasse had entered the Chesapeake, Washington and Rochambeau suddenly changed their plans, resolving on a quick march to Virginia. The troops began to march on the 19th of August, at four in the morning. Part of the American army crossed to Saeden's landing; the rest followed the shore road to King's Ferry, and crossed there. The French took a circuitous route to Verplanck's Point, by way of Phillipsburgh, North Castle, Leguid's Tavern, Pensbridge, Crampond and Peekskill, where they arrived on the 22nd. Rochambeau, unwilling to pass so near West Point without seeing it, devoted the 23d to visiting that famous fortress in the company of Washington and several officers. The same day the French wagons and the legion of Lanzun crossed the river, at King's Ferry, and halted at Haverstraw, near the residence of Joshua Hett Smith. Bourbounaes' brigade passed over on the 24th, and the rest on the 25th. Washington left a corps of 3,000 militiamen, under Heath, to defend the Highlands. The allied forces marched in three grand divisions, each one day's march apart, the second division spending one night at the quarters occupied by the first division the previous night. The American force, 3,000 men, constituted the first division. The first bivouac after leaving Haverstraw was at Sufferns, the next at Pompton.

Cornwallis surrendered on the 19th of October. Orange county's Continental troops participated in this campaign, under General James Clinton. The French spent the winter in camps at Yorktown and Hampton, Va. Washington sent the Virginia militia south, and also dispatched the Maryland and Pennsylvania troops under Lafayette to reinforce Greene's army. He himself came back towards the Hudson with the remainder of the American Continentals. This was practically the end of the war. The French army re-crossed the river at King's Ferry September 14 of the following year, and was welcomed on the west shore by the main Continental army. The French defiled between the American lines, which were now well equipped; their arms had come from France, and their clothing principally from the storehouses at Yorktown. While the French remained here, they were encamped in front of Crampond, with an advance guard on the Croton. The Americans were at the ferry, with their advance guard at the mouth of the Croton. The position was of great strategical importance; it defended the Highlands and at the same time threatened New York. When certain that there was to be no more fighting, the French left their encampments on the 12th of October, and from Boston in December they embarked for home. The main Continental army spent the winter at Newburgh.

During the course of the war the Continental Congress made three calls on the people of this State for troops for the Continental line, the first in 1775, the second early in 1776, the third in the summer of 1776. The returns on record, as is generally known, are incomplete, both of Continental and militia organizations. All returns made subsequent to the year 1781 were destroyed by fire at Washington in 1800. The two militia regiments raised in the section of county south of the mountains were Colonel A. Hawks Hay's, with headquarters at Haverstraw, and Colonel Abraham Lent's, with headquarters at Tappan. From these two fundamental organizations were mainly drawn not only the Minute Men, but also the companies for the Continental line. Only the names of the officers of Colonel Lent's regiment have survived. In 1777 the remnants of this regiment were consolidated with the Haverstraw regiment. Southern Orange furnished in whole or part at least three companies for the Continental line:

(1.) Captain Robert Johnston's company, mustered August 4th, 1775; served under Colonel James Clinton in the campaign into Canada. (Names given below.)

(2.) Captain Amos Hutchins' company, organized in February, 1776, and attached to Ritzema's First Regiment in April, 1776.

(3.) Captain Amos Hutchins' second company, organized in November, 1776, for Colonel Dubois's Fifth Regiment. Served with distinction at the battle of Forts Montgomery and Clinton. (Names given below.)
